

Project Update: July 2016

This month we are teaching children about sea grass beds importance and why they matter. Using puppet shows, storytellers and a memory card game, we educated children of two local educative centers in the Guatemalan Caribbean. This is just the halfway point of our project! Children are very enthusiastic when is about learning. Teachers and fathers are invited to join this effort in order to make them replicators of knowledge too. Great news for sustainability in our protected area (Refugio de Vida Silvestre Punta de Mananique). Our National Council are implementing educational activities once a month in the communities of the area! All of this is possible thanks to the support of Rufford Foundation and the help of the communities.

For further information about this project and other related projects please visit: www.fundacionmundoazul.com

Left to right: Memory of the sea; Raise your hands for Sea Grass Beds & A boy and a Book.