

Project Update: October 2017

The field season started on July 15 and finished on October 15, during breeding season of humpback whales in Colombia. The first work during the field trip was to establish a relationship with the local stakeholders of three different localities (Juanchaco, Ladrilleros and La Barra) and with the national park authorities (Parque Nacional Natural Uramba Bahía Málaga). Furthermore, we presented our project and we conducted a workshop with local authorities. Also, we conducted surveys to tourists and volunteers that work in the park. At last, the field work was complemented with research about political, demography and economic information about the three different localities of the study area.

The photo shows two of the local members of La Barra and a member of our team.
