

Project Update: February 2012

I've recently returned from Mount Moco, where the project is going well. We assessed our first replanting attempt from October last year, and I'm pleased to say that all the trees are healthy and thriving. We cleared a new area of bracken and planted another 12 trees, so we now have 22 trees in the ground.

During my next visit I hope to expand the nursery and plant out another batch of trees, as quite a few are beginning to get large enough. This should be in May 2012.

On the stoves front, the manufacturers have reported that they have now produced 20 stoves, and are working on the remaining 60 to complete our order.